SYNOPSIS

On the fringe of the Namib Desert lies the Skeleton Coast. The Gates of Hell. The Land God Made in Anger. It is the last holy grail in exploration. No one has ever completed its entire length in an unbroken line before. Explorer Kate Leeming sets out to be the first.

Her thousand-mile journey sees her enduring some of the most inhospitable terrains and harshest climates on the planet, in one of Africa's most remote and spectacular locations.

Accompanied by local companions, she battles extreme winds, energy-sapping sand dunes and quicksand, and comes face to face with the endangered but deadly Kunene Lions hidden in the vast desert. Travelling on an all-wheel drive fat-bike, she traverses beautiful landscapes, and discovers both the region's hidden secrets and the harsh realities of life in this unforgiving land. The desert pushes Kate to the edge of her mental and physical limits as she is forced live off her wits and survival skills.

Diamonds in the Sand is not just about the first-ever complete bicycle journey down the Skeleton Coast, it is also a journey into the positive, resilient mindset of one of Australia's most accomplished contemporary explorers.
